

THREE RAILS LIVE
Perverbs by Nick Montfort

Where there's a will ... carry a big stick.

Look both ways ... before you leap.

Nothing ventured ... makes a man healthy, wealthy, and wise.

He who hesitates ... gets the worm.

A stitch in time ... saves the whole nine yards.

Like water off the duck that bit me.

Fools rush in where there's fire.

Where there's smoke ... angels fear to tread.

Don't bring a cock to a dog fight.

Water, water everywhere you hang your hat.

Birds of a feather get the grease.

A fool and his money -- sailor's delight.

Look both ways before crossing -- to Rome.

A fool and his money ... passing in the night.

Like water off a big stick.

Speak softly ... before crossing the street.

If you can't beat 'em ... spoil the broth.

Don't bring a bus to a train fight.

Fool me once, shame on you ... but the second mouse gets the cheese.

Fools build houses ... and at the end of the day, the king and pawn go back into the same box.

People who live in glass houses ... have a room with a view.

If at first you don't succeed ... any train will get you there.

A narrow fellow in the bush ... is worth two in the hand.

One man's junk is another man's ... castle.

Out of sight ... is a dish best served cold.

Teach a man to fish ... in the eye of the beholder.

Where there's smoke, there's ... mirrors.

A place for everything is not gold.

Don't rock those who wait.

Don't cross a bridge -- serve two masters.

All happy families ... lead to Rome.
